A RAISIN AND A CAKE OF YEAST

Old Farmer Al. Falfa solves his Bar Yeast problem by using a home brew receipt from the "Life Savers' Manual". Al's skillful brewing proves that a kick in the glass is worth two in the pasture, for the "kick" in the first cup of brew shatters his cup to smithereens. In an adjoining field, Rob and Rita Rabbit are "finale-hopping" to fiddle strains played by Uncle Robert Rabbit. Suddenly a trio of snoop hounds rush down upon them. Rita and Uncle Robert manage to reach their habitation. Rob runs across the country and is fast becoming exhausted. He runs into a cave with the hounds in close pursuit and faints. The brewer gives the bunny a drink to revive him. It does this and then "some". Rob gets so ambitious that he goes down into the cave again and beats-up the hounds, causing them to flee in terror. Now, Henrietta Hen happens along, attracted perhaps, by the fumes of Al's still. The chicken looks "good" to Al and he gives her a drink. The strength of the brew blows off Henrietta's feathers. Having acquired a taste for the liquor, the Hen accompanies Al to the still and they imbibe quite freely. Soon they are taking a trip. Al develops wings and flies skyward at a terrific rate. He passes through a severe thunder storm and lightening flashes at him. He lands upon a strange planet where he finds an odd egg. When he attempts to pick it up, it suddenly turns into a three-headed fire-cat. The monster gives chase to Al and his feet feel like tons of lead as the three-headed demon seems to gain upon him. To escape the animal Al dives off the planet and falls earthward like a thunderbolt. He falls within the Arctic Circle, landing upon an ice floor to the dismay of a pair of flirting Walruses. Al goes right through the ice down into Davy Jones' Locker. His imagination is still active, so when the rock turns into a mermaid he dances a jolly number with his sea queen. Then, as the effects of the brew wear off, he finds himself embracing Henrietta Hen beside the old copper still. Both agree that the trip was wonderful and wax enthusiastically on the advantages of travel.

Moral: There Is Nothing Like Travel To Broaden One.
